[illegible]

Hiccup is a symptom of the digestive tract being stimulated. It is extremely ordinary. There is one layer of septum transversum, being the diaphragm constituted by muscle between the chest and the abdominal cavity of the body, through which the esophagus passes. And the place for passing through is narrow. If there are some pessimal stimulations in daily life, such as eating too fast, eating something cold, breathe into a lot of chilled air facing the wind and eating too full, which all will stimulate the nerve to cause the abnormal intensive contract of the diaphragm through a series of complicated nervous reflex. At that time the excessive gas in the stomach will run out through the mouth. The vocal cord vibrates and makes a noise so we make hiccup.
